BETHEL FAIR DRAWS LARGE CROWDS TWO DAYS

The second annual Bethel Fair held at Riverside Park last week drew good sized crowds on both days. The weather was all that could be desired and the varied program seemed to be just what the people wanted.

This is the first attempt in recent years to hold a two day fair and the success of the big program offered this year is due entirely to the efforts of Henry W. Boyker who purchased the old Riverside Park grounds after the fair last fall with the intention of forming a fair association. This he was unable to do and he carried the project through with the help of a few interested friends.

With the purchase was included the big barn erected by Dr. W. R. Chapman several years ago. This was moved to the fair grounds last spring. During the last few weeks a board fence has been built, stalls and sheds erected for the horses, a dance floor and bleachers put up near the judge's stand, as well as many improvements on the baseball grounds and race track.

The midway stretched from the gate on the southeast corner of the grounds around outside the track to a point opposite the judges' stand. Along the line were several bazaar games, many stands serving eatables from a hot dog to a complete meal, a wrestling match, and the usual varied line of peddlers, ring toss games, ten pins, etc.

A feature of special interest to Bethel people was the exhibition of "Clemens" Marionettes. Mr. Clemens' studio is at his home, Bethel, adjoining the fair grounds. He has shown these lively entertaining figures in every state, but this was their first public appearance in Bethel.

Two interesting baseball games were played, attracting large crowds each day. The game Friday, between Gorham, N. H., and Rumford, was won by Rumford 10-4. On Saturday, when Bethel and Bryant Pond played the score was 6-5 in favor of Bryant Pond.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE PLANS FOR A QUICK CAMPAIGN

The Farm Bureau Executive Board is making a vigorous attempt to get Oxford County membership back to the 1930 level.

Seven of the eight district managers appointed to conduct the campaign were present at the recent meeting of the committee at which detailed plans for the campaign were made. The plan is to hold five sectional meetings to be attended by all community chairmen and committee members during the week of September 21. On the following Monday, September 23, all solicitors in the county will go out, cards in hand, and complete the campaign before night. All members can help by having their two dollars ready; then the job will be done, a prize will be won, and your committee happy as a "son of a gun."

Results of the day will be reported by telephone from chairmen to district managers and from managers to your county committee.

BEST FIREWORKS DISPLAY IN THE STATE TO BE SEEN AT OXFORD COUNTY FAIR

The Oxford County Agricultural Society at South Paris is again to the front with their fireworks displays this year and have contracted for one of the finest shows ever given in this part of the State. Attractions may come and go but the universal appeal of fireworks to young and old never dies out. Each year fireworks manufacturers contrive and perfect new devices both in aerial work as well as set pieces and Oxford County Fair will get its share. Among the features to be seen on September 15 will be the Last Stand, being a thrilling naval battle between two modern cruisers, and this feature alone is well worthy of special mention owing to its action and elaborateness. It will be repeated also on September 16. Comes will entertain the crowds and prominent among them for both nights will be our old radio friends Amos 'n Andy with their laughable antics. The sporting element is being well taken care of in an up to date cocking match in fireworks and don't the feather best fly! Then we have running races and a wonderful aerial display culled from a Grand Finale that beggars description.

The Last Stand depicts on a gigantic scale the open sea and a naval guard action between two modern naval Goliaths at the Battle of Jutland. The scene opens with a German battleship fleeing from the pursuing British Armada and being overtaken by a British battleship, turns at bay like some desperate encounter as a self-sacrifice for the benefit and safety of the remainder of the German Fleet. The guns open up at long range and the air is quickly full of the deadly shells hurled at one another. The heavy guns keep crashing out with their reverberating thunder and are aided by their smaller rapid fire guns and the noise and din is heard for miles as the boats approach one another nearer and nearer. The German boat has stalked its all on a battle to the death and as the British guns, due to their superior armaments, rake her fore and aft, she is quickly in a crippled condition but still refuses to surrender. Night is falling fast and the battle keeps up with undiminished vigor. Finally the British ship maneuvers into favorable position and lets fly with one of its deadly flying machines and the swiftly moving missile can be plainly followed on its errand of destruction. It reaches its target and a terrific explosion follows; then the boilers blow up and the German boat starts rapidly to sink, still keeping up its fire to the end. The British ship hauls off in the meantime and fires a final salute in honor of its late opponent thus bringing to a close one of the most effective pyrotechnic portrayals ever given and a scene ever to be remembered.

The children of weak parents who always let their offspring have their own way at home, get quite a shock when they get out in the world and discover that when the world says no, it means it, and all the kicking and screaming and howling won't do any good or bring results.

DRIVER AND CHILD INJURED DURING RACES SATURDAY

A. E. Snell of Mechanic Falls, a well known sulky driver, was seriously injured in the Free for All race at Riverside Park Saturday afternoon, when his horse, Bin McKyle, was crowded in a jam on the track and he was thrown from his seat.

He was taken to a Lewiston hospital in Greenleaf's ambulance suffering from a broken collar bone and multiple bruises.

A little while afterward, Sarah McKenzie, 10 year old daughter of J. A. McKenzie of Mason was knocked unconscious when she was struck by a wheel of a racing sulky. She was not badly hurt.

"IT'S A WISE CHILD"

Starting Monday night, September 14, and continuing throughout the week the Lakewood Players will offer as their sixteenth attraction of the season "It's a Wise Child," a comedy by Laurence E. Johnson, which was produced by the late David Belasco and which ran for an entire season at the Belasco theatre in New York. Johnson, the author, also wrote such comedy hits as "What Anne Brought Home" and "Mary's Other Husband."

"It's a Wise Child" is a domestic comedy, something of the type of last year's popular offering, "Broken Dishes." It is the story of a family who find themselves in difficulties because of the inventiveness of the daughter of the household. She is engaged to a middle-aged banker, whom she does not love although the family is determined she shall marry him, and to save herself from this predicament she invents a story that places the entire family into a series of hilarious complications. There are any number of amusing characters including a belligerent iceman, a comic servant, the self-righteous and hypocritical "It-town" banker, a young lawyer who finally solves all the problems by falling in love with the girl, a worried mother and various small-town types. When "It's a Wise Child" was produced in New York, Robert Garland, dramatic critic of the "World-Telegram" wrote "It's the heartiest laugh in town," while the reviewer for the New York Evening Post said: "It is highly recommended to anyone in search of comedy that is actually comic."

Luau Lissack's broadcasting orchestra continues to furnish the music for the Lakewood dances which are given at the luxurious Lakewood Casino Club.

WHAT SHE FOUND IN BOHEMIA

By FANNIE HURST

(A. L. M. Service.)

TWO years after her marriage Ina Mullins began to think she had made a mistake. Tom Mullins was all right. In fact he was a little more than that, because as time went on, she began to realize new things about him. Force, executive ability, determination, not untempered with tenderness.

In the brief period of their marriage he had gone forward astonishingly in his business and had matured in the finest sense of the word. The root of the evil discontent had its beginnings in a situation that was quite outside the matter of her relationships with her husband. Ina did not quite realize this, for she was a type of woman who is not keen on self-analysis. She only knew that as the second year of her marriage drew to its conclusion there was gathering in her breast a tightening knot of unrest.

Tom Mullins was sure, and rightly so, that he could have placed his finger upon the beginnings of the rift between them.

As a girl Ina had manifested a flair for painting. One of her water-colors had been sold from an amateur exhibition at two hundred dollars while she was still a girl in school. It was after the birth of her child that Ina once more began to resume her painting. It was her way of warding off what she feared would be the menace of domestic routine. Mullins was well able to afford sufficient help to keep the mind of Ina clear of household minutiae, and she began early in her marriage to see to it that the conventional routine of married life did not close her in. For instance, she made it her business, after engaging the services of a competent practical nurse, to pack her palette, brushes and easels into her pretty dark blue sedan every morning and go off into the woods or to the art galleries to sketch, copy or paint.

When her little girl was three years old, one of Ina's oil paintings, "Theory," received honorable mention in a prominent exhibition.

It was right there Tom always felt he could have placed his finger on the beginnings of the end.

Ina began to indulge in the well-known psychology of the woman who feels that she has thrown a career and talent to the dogs, by virtue of having married. Ina began to cultivate an "art-set," so to speak. Tom, who was proud enough, in his way, of his wife's talent, encouraged this and even though he found little in common with the rather special folk who began to crowd into his home at odd hours, he was a man of sufficient mental accomplishment to respect the creative in others. When things, however, began to go willy-nilly, as inevitably they did, when Ina cast her lot more and more with the so-called bohemian groups who were glad of the opportunity to invade her comfortable home, Tom attempted to put his foot on the brakes. But too late. The smoldering suspicion within Ina Mullins that she had thrown herself away was a raging fire by now. She wanted out. She wanted out of the confinement of household; out of the conservative regime that enclosed her as the wife of a conservative business man.

It was from that point that Tom Mullins ceased to put up his fight. He was not a bad psychologist, but perhaps he failed in the quality of persistence that might have been necessary to subdue in Ina certain illusions of self-grandeur. He ceased putting up his fight because it seemed to him that the things which he not only desired but required in a wife were palpably not to be found in Ina. The subject of divorce was calmly discussed between them, Tom, with a natural conservatism of the male, and with an inherent abhorrence for notoriety, was willing to permit Ina to try an additional year of adjustment before coming to the drastic act of separation. Much as he despised what he had come to regard as the pretensions of the pseudo-bohemian groups with which she had surrounded herself, he agreed to maintain Ina in a flat in the bohemian section of the city for a period of a twelvemonth pending certain mental readjustments that he hoped would take place in her mind.

Ina, clamping at the bit, rebellious, discontented, tired of conservative life, searching for the Latin quarters of Paris and the Greenwich village of New York, held out for immediate action.

As usual, the matter of the child was controversial. The daughter of Ina and Tom, aged three, became a bone of contention. But in the end it became apparent, even to the rebellious Ina herself, that the kind of life that lay ahead of her, the life of the studio, was not the ideal one in which to rear a child. It was here that Tom Mullins saw his advantage and pursued it. He agreed finally to divorce Ina and grant her sufficient alimony on which to live, but only on condition that she surrender Greta.

It was with a genuine mother pang that Ina finally agreed to this, her consolation lying in the fact that in so doing she was convinced that the greater good of her child lay in her heart. And so it was. Certainly the subsequent environment of Greta Mullins, in the home of her father, and even after he had married again and introduced a stepmother into that home, was a safer, sounder one than any Ina would have been able to provide for her in the years to come.

For Paris Ina went, living there for three years on the left bank of the Seine, enjoying its camaraderie, carrying on the house, painting a little, playing more; talking a great deal of art accomplishing not so much. There were months of the easy, care-free life along the Italian Riviera and in the little art colonies that flock to Capri.

In her own eyes at least, Ina became a sort of beloved vagabond. She painted a great deal, mostly where little art colonies were foregathered, but somehow, after the first flash in the pan of her painting, a little, playing more; talking a great deal of art accomplishing not so much. There were months of the easy, care-free life along the Italian Riviera and in the little art colonies that flock to Capri.

And so the years marched on, a good many of them, before Ina began to experience her first pangs of realization. The first realizations were that the world of her bohemia was a shifting one. Why, in the ten years since she had been living here-and-there, faces had come and faces had gone. Young students had flashed into the scene and then somehow had drifted out of the scene. A few of them had gone on to accomplishment and fame. But most of them, in fact the appalling majority of them, had just dropped out. Constantly Ina was receiving letters from erstwhile friends; art students who had come to Paris from Indiana, Sussex, Brittany, Sicily and had drifted back home again, there to settle down to commercial life, marriage, obscurity.

It seemed to Ina, looking back, that 90 per cent of the inhabitants of her bohemia had passed in the night, so to speak. They had drifted into the scene and then somehow had drifted out of the scene. A few of them had gone on to accomplishment and fame. But most of them, in fact the appalling majority of them, had just dropped out. Constantly Ina was receiving letters from erstwhile friends; art students who had come to Paris from Indiana, Sussex, Brittany, Sicily and had drifted back home again, there to settle down to commercial life, marriage, obscurity.

When Ina was forty she was rather a scrawny, art-looking woman, who wore homespun, sandals, her hair and neckline stained with finger paint. She still moved about from bohemia to bohemia. She still sat in the candle-lit cafes of this and that Latin quarter, smoking, drinking, discussing art—discussing art—discussing art. Yearly she submitted her work to this and that salon; yearly it failed to achieve distinction. After a while, Ina found herself working practically not at all. The business of being a bohemian monopolized her entire time.

There came the night when, sitting in a cellar cafe known as "The Green Duck" in the Greenwich village district of New York, she found herself next to a table occupied by her husband, his second wife and her daughter Greta. The Tom Mullinses were on a business trip to New York and Tom was slumming with his wife and daughter.

Tom and Ina were modern about this meeting of theirs. And so, for that matter, was the extremely pleasant and personable Pauline whom Tom had chosen for his second wife. Greta was the one who caught at the heart of Ina. It smote her with sudden terrible realization that she would never have recognized this exotic and lovely young woman as her daughter had she met her on the street. It was more of a shock to Ina than anything that had ever happened to her. After that shock, however, the meeting went on in what would be considered the ultra-modern manner. Ina, in her homespun, sandals, and bare feet, joined the Tom Mullinses at their table. They smoked, joked, ate and drank in the stuffy little interior, and Ina took great pains to point out to them the notorious figures of her bohemia. To the casual observer, it was just any meeting in any stuffy Greenwich village cafe.

The Tom Mullinses were charming to Ina. Pauline Mullins displayed fine sense of humor, and the lovely Greta, regarding her mother with sweet, unawakened, unflattering eyes, was all that could be desired in courtesy.

It was after midnight when the group at the table finally broke up. Pauline Mullins was concerned for her stepdaughter. Greta had been up too late on several consecutive nights. It was time she returned to their hotel for some sleep. The eyes of these two women—stepmother and daughter—met and smiled, their hands were constantly caressing one another. The three of them trooped out after polite good-nights to Ina, the two women arm in arm affectionately following the footsteps of Tom, who did all the chores, paying the bills, getting them in their wraps, bothering about their possessions, picking up objects that were carelessly dropping such as glasses, scarfs and gloves.

They went out, leaving Ina seated alone at her table in bohemia.

Acquisitive Bird
One of the most remarkable birds of New Guinea is the garden bird. Around the base of a tree he builds a small hut, and in front of this lays out a lawn composed of moss. On this all kinds of attractive objects are placed, such as flowers and the wings and feet of gorgeous insects, and the bird sits on the object the more the bird seems to admire it. When this little gardener is tired of his garden, he collects the objects, throws them away and sets to work to obtain another collection.

DREAM.

As the changeless days go by us,
It's the humdrum things that try us,
More than troubles that defy us—
It's the dull routine that kills.
But the fleeting hour that's gleaming
With the phantom dream we're dreaming,
Drives us on across the hills!

Let us be a staunch defender
Of our dreams—and not surrender
To our task—but give it splendor,
Make it glow and make it gleam
With the light of high ambition;
High or low be our position—
Let us never cease to dream!

TWO-MINUTE SERMON

by REV. GEORGE HECHT

TOO NARROW

"You are too narrow," said my candid friend. "On the contrary," said I. "I am too broad to be bound by your pacts, covenants, restraints and evasions. I refuse to be shackled. I demand an independent platform where I can teach what I believe is truth; the whole truth, such as I have discovered it; and nothing but the truth. This liberty I demand for myself. I willingly concede to others. Opinions I will gladly surrender for harmony and unity. When at any price might be too dear. Principles I refuse to set aside, disregard, ignore, or relinquish for the sake of the approval of an individual, a group of individuals, or any consideration whatsoever. That I believe that I teach and I would be as guilty as hell if I did otherwise."

The New Beacon Range Burner

THE BEACON RANGE BURNER is, in many respects, a radical departure from the usual types. It is an engineered product, the result of modern engineering science concentrated on the production of a range burner embodying only proven principles.

This Burner has not only received long, exacting laboratory tests, but has also been put in the practical test of use in various types of stoves in the home.

The Beacon Range Burner is a proven product and represents the best principles of construction as developed by painstaking research and engineering study, and contains many exclusive features.

APPEARANCE. In keeping with the modern kitchen the Beacon Range Burner was designed for artistic appearance, including burner, bottle stand, and control valve. It is finished in decorative bronze for the regular model.

EASILY INSTALLED. Every part has been designed for "standard" installation. The burner and burner base are machined to receive each other, are interchangeable, and self-leveling. It can be moved either radially or in the plane of the burner, and locked in any desired position. This fitting under the burner is regardless of range construction. No special tools are necessary for installation. A single small open wrench will do the whole job.

THE BEACON VAPORATOR. The exclusive Beacon Vaporator is made of imported brass, a highly priced material, available for this purpose. It retards turning of gas and carbon and will last indefinitely. Its peculiar design makes it easy for anyone to take apart and clean if cleaning should ever be necessary.

The Beacon Vaporator uses a light gas, and feeds this gas to the burner base, instead of the usual method of feeding gas to the burner from the bottom of the burner (as in most burners) thus generating uniform heat and radiates it from the sides, assuring heating of hot water coils, water backs and covers, heretofore rarely accomplished. It is less sensitive to variations in gas pressure.

Good books are like treasured friends.

THIS MAN'S WAR: By Charles F. Under, 260th Machine Gun Battalion, 77th Div., A. B. P. 323 pp. $2.50. Those who have read "All Quiet on the Western Front" will live with this boy his daily battle front experiences as he writes Mother "I am complimented today for being a hero. Back home we would be laughing at it." "I don't want to kill." "Don't send me any more money." "Mother." An artist and raw rookie in April, a cynical veteran in July, a human tale. If there ever was one, this is a book written as the fellow on knew "Over There" would tell it.

THE FIDDLER OF THE RITZ: By Armand Vescey, 308 pp. $3.50. Who dances, must pay the fiddler. Who danced to the music of Armand Vescey's violin at the Ritz in New York, have paid in full measure in the revelation of their true characters. Old and young, kings and beggars, as in a drama. The book is exciting, humorous, touching and sentimental. Vescey says he's a fiddler, not a writer. Our impression is that he is a success at both. Alas, he declares this is his last and first book.

THE NUN OF THE CAPELOLO: By Dorothea White, 321 pp. $2.00.

This book concerns the life and letters of Henrietta Gardner Macy, the American who spent forty years in Venice. Gabriel D'Annunzio speaks of her as "that rarest phenomenon—a real and true living person." The great Duse whose friend she was suggests the title. The interest the book has for this reviewer is in the letters to her friends. She paints with words. One sees what she writes. This is a book I am reluctant to lend. I want it handy when Blue Devils chase.

THE HAPPY VALLEY: By Max Brand, 289 pp. $2.00.

Another Western by the author of "Mystery Ranch," "Smiling Charlie," "Pillar Mountain" and others. The local Bad-Man, just returned from an eight year prison term, becomes an outlaw four days later for a crime he never committed. He escapes through the aid of a benefactor who runs a Reform Colony at Happy Valley. If there has been action leading up to this event, it is nothing to the speed of happenings which climax in good Western fashion. There is action, plenty of action for man reading.

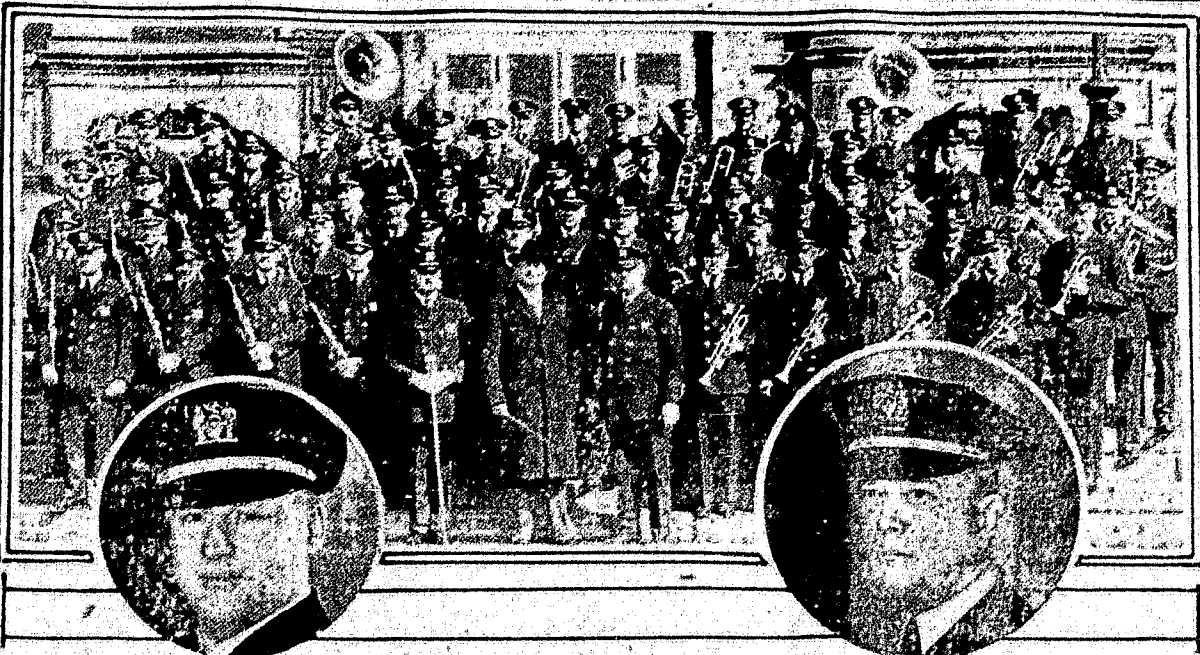

ONE LIVES TO TELL THE TALE: By Edmund Gilligan, 255 pp. illus. $3.50.

I have read many stories of thrilling escape, but as Lowell Thomas says in his introduction "... where else will you find one that has had nearly the whole vast continent of Africa, from top to bottom as its setting?" Ludwig Ehlers, Executive Officer of the U. S. Coast Guard Ship "Cortigan," relates his escape with 300 other German sailors from a British Prison Camp at Cape Town, and their two year death march north to Ceylon. Now, he alone is the sole survivor. It's a hair raising thriller. Mace. "No mistake."

Feared for Watch

My little daughter was with me in the washroom on a train. She took up my wrist watch and I warned her to be careful. It slipped from her hand and fell to the floor. I took up the watch and held it to my ear, at which my daughter exclaimed, "Oh, mother, is it unconscious?"—Chicago Tribune.

W HATEVER the poor does seem to give the Americans. The trade of coffee, with Brazil, appears to have moved, but first the interests walked because the coffee dealers in the United States had a loud howl that the coffee would be injured; and now the National federation is up in arms for the protection of the coffee that Brazil, as one writer has said, is the main source of the coffee for all the other countries. The coffee-barter has been going on for several months. Most of the South American export of coffee is to New York, and several of the millers there have been buying the coffee from Brazil. Argentina here has been the granary for Brazil with the farm house and the sale of nearly all the produce of Argentina annually. The Argentine government is registered a formal protest, but it goes through anyhow. If the farm board read the China for the sale of cotton on long term credit, some of the old ship owners will be resuscitated and the grain and will then be sent to the United States. It is also suggested that the cotton should be shipped in cotton bales and help, by 7,500,000, in the cotton surplus. This whole plan would be a great benefit to most American cotton producers. The solution of the cotton problem has not yet been reached. The Senate, at the best of times, passed a bill prohibiting the export of cotton in 1932 and the House passed a bill that the governor of the state should raise the price of the cotton raised in the state. The legislation. This plan is a great benefit to the nation's cotton crop and the nation's cotton crop. The Governor Long's plan is a great benefit to the cotton raisers and the cotton raisers have neither the equipment nor the experience to raise ZENEVA was swarming with businessmen and politicians during the Economic Conference for twenty-nations assembled here as a co-ordinating committee of the European union, and the Council of the League of Nations met on Monday; while the members of the League are gathering for the sessions of planning September 7.

The hushers were in the streets not the least nor the most prominent figures in the Russian team who is the Soviet agent for foreign affairs.

The first thing this Russian ambassador did to the co-ordination proposal for a general session past. Andre Francoise delegates, tried to have occurred to the economic conference where it could be separate non-aggression League, vigorously seconded by Curtis and Dino Grandi, vigorously insisted upon action. The committee had to pass the plan over

News Review of Current Events the World Over

Farm Board Quits Buying Cotton as Well as Wheat—New Government Securities Marketed—Doings in Geneva.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

Carl Williams, vice chairman of the board, announced that no further purchases of wheat or cotton would be made under any circumstances.

"Stabilization," said Mr. Williams, is valuable in the face of temporary or seasonal surpluses. But the board has discovered, and it hopes that the American people have discovered, that continued purchases in the face of continued production is not a remedy for the agricultural situation.

The board's cessation of wheat buying had previously been announced, but the statement of its determination to withdraw from the cotton market was new, and was not pleasant news for the southern planters.

E. A. Gudahy, Jr., president of the Gudahy Packing company, gave notice that his company would invest 10 per cent of its southern sales up to December 1 in cotton bought on the open market, the total to be invested being estimated at about $1,000,000. The cotton will be held by the Gudahy company for one year if necessary, or until such time as cotton returns to 10 cents a pound. The first purchases were made at about 7 cents a pound.

WHATEVER the poor farm board does seem to anger a lot of Americans. The trade of wheat for coffee, with Brazil, appeared to be a wise move, but first the shipping interests wanted because the grain was to go in Brazilian ships; then the coffee dealers in the United States raised a loud howl that their trade would be injured; and now the Millers' National federation is up in arms. The reason for the protest of the millers is that Brazil, as one result of the wheat-coffee barter, has declared an embargo on all imports of flour for twelve months. Most of the flour in South American export is milled in Brazil, N. Y., and several southern states and the millers there will be hit by the embargo. And that is all. Argentina heretofore has been the granary for Brazil, and the deal with the farm board virtually ends the sale of nearly 10,000,000 bushels of Argentine grain to Brazil annually. The Argentine government has registered a formal protest in Washington, but of course the deal will go through anyhow.

If the farm board reaches terms with China for the sale of a lot of wheat on long term credit, it is possible that this whole plan would give employment to much American labor.

The solution of the cotton problem has not been reached. The Louisiana legislature, at the behest of Governor Long, passed a bill prohibiting the export of cotton in 1932, with the provision that the governor might suspend it if states raising 75 per cent of the crop failed to adopt similar legislation. This put the matter up to Texas, producer of one-third of the nation's cotton crop, and the sentiment in that state appeared to be against Governor Long's scheme. For a thing, the cotton raisers of the South have neither the equipment nor the experience to raise any other crop.

GENEVA was swarming with businessmen and political scientists during the week. Economic reports from twenty nations assembled here as a co-ordinating committee of the League of Nations met on M. L. Litvinov Tuesday; while the members of the League assembly were uttering for the sessions of that body beginning September 7. Most of the 10 notches were in the Swiss city and not the least nor the latest was Edith Litvinov, that wily and skillful statesman who is the Soviet committee for foreign affairs.

The first thing this Russian did was submit to the co-ordinating committee a proposal for a general non-aggression pact. Andre Francois-Poncet, French delegate, tried to have the plan referred to the economic committee of the league where it could be allowed to die. For France likes better the idea of separate non-aggression treaties. Litvinov, vigorously seconded by Docet Curieux and Dino Grandi, Italian foreign minister, insisted upon immediate action. The committee finally voted to pass the plan over to a subcommittee which was to edit it and report back to the co-ordinating committee.

Senator Henri Benard of France, former ambassador to Washington, told the co-ordinating committee that the isolation policy of the United States was obsolete. "American entanglement in world affairs is now complete," he said. "The penetration of American capital since the World War has made a 'European bloc' impossible, and provincialism appears to be a thing of the past for continents as well as for nations."

"Recent events demonstrated that the whole world is involved as soon as one nation is in peril. No state is permitted to collapse without affecting all other states."

On the agenda of the league council was the proposed Austro-German customs union, but this seemed to be disposed of finally when the secretary of the league received from the World court at The Hague a verdict declaring the agreement was illegal, being in violation of the protocol of 1922 in which Austria specifically undertook to maintain her economic and political independence in return for financial assistance from the big powers.

SECRETARY of the Treasury Mellon placed on the market new government securities totaling $1,000,000,000 to start the full financing campaign of the treasury. Treasury bonds for $500,000,000 headed the list. They run for 20 to 24 years and bear 3 per cent interest, the lowest since the war. The rest of the total sum was made up of $500,000,000 of one-year treasury certificates of indebtedness bearing interest at the rate of 1 1/2 per cent.

It was revealed in Washington that the government would need probably all of this huge sum to retire maturing obligations and to finance treasury operations during the next quarter, which makes it apparent that the deficit at the end of the year will far exceed that for the last twelve months. In some quarters it is predicted that the deficit, taking into consideration the fact that there will be no war debt payments this year, will run above a billion and a quarter. The public debt during the course of the year, if no more is made to increase receipts, may be increased as much as a billion dollars.

GREAT BRITAIN'S financial credit was restored when American and French bankers, led by J. P. Morgan, agreed to lend the government $200,000,000 for one year. In America the loan—one-half of the total—was absorbed by the banks; but one-half of the French share was offered to the public. The French were elated over the arrangement, looking on it as a fine political coup which would bring Britain into close collaboration with them both economically and politically.

England's financial troubles, however, are likely to result in the downfall of one of her financial giants—Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England. It is believed he will be retired at the end of his present term. Mr. Norman was reported to be on the verge of a nervous and physical breakdown at the time of the crisis, and he hurried over to Canada for a vacation, leaving his associates to get out of the mess as best they could. It was said, too, that before leaving he tried to induce Mr. Morgan to place the entire loan in America, shutting out France, and that this was reported to the French.

PRESIDENT MACHADO formally announced that the Cuban revolt had been entirely suppressed, and then went fishing. The final blow to the rebel cause came with the surrender of Col. Roberto Mendez Peraza, last of its big militant leaders, and the departure for New York of Dr. Miguel Mariano Gomez, former mayor of Havana. Nationalist circles were shocked when word of Senor Gomez' departure became known. He had been believed to be the only man with sufficient support to keep up the revolutionary spirit.

FRANK T. HINES, administrator of veterans' affairs, addressing the annual convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars in Kansas City, asked on behalf of the government that all veterans' organizations refrain from asking congress for further legislation in their behalf until they have studied and determined the ultimate cost of relief acts on the law books. He noted that the government's annual outlay for benefits to former service men amount to about $800,000,000 and stressed what he termed the "infinite" of all forms of veterans' aid toward increase above the initial expectations.

In the meantime, he said, the principal need of veterans is more jobs. He explained the bureau was working with the Labor department toward this end.

JOSEPH PAUL-BONCOUR, chairman of the foreign affairs committee of the French chamber of deputies, gave out in Paris a statement in which he renewed the proposal that the nations of the world place their armed forces under control of the League of Nations, and predicted that France would lead the way in the disarmament conference in 1932. This statement was declared by the French foreign office to represent the permanent view of the government. In Washington official quarters it was received coldly, being regarded as a move on the part of France to determine the attitude of the new national British ministry on the old subject of pooling of armaments.

SEVERAL incidents within the last few days have served to bolster up the Roosevelt boom for the Democratic Presidential nomination. After angering Tammany—apparently by supporting the plans of the Republican legislators of New York in the investigation of the administration of New York City, the governor smoothed all this out by proving the demand of Tammany that the inquiry be enlarged to take in the whole state. Then came the report of Samuel Seabury, commissioner, in the case of District Attorney Thomas C. C. Crain. Mr. Seabury mildly censured Crain but recommended that he should not be removed from office. The worst he had to say against Crain, after months of delving into his record was that the Tammany prosecutor had "bused himself ineffectively" and that particularly as regards the racketeering situation, had failed to act "in a fitting and competent manner."

Mr. Crain being a good Tammany man, the supposed breach between Governor Roosevelt and Tammany was still further lessened, and the prospect that he would have the support of the entire Democracy of New York in next year's convention was still further increased.

ONE of those brutal crimes that shook the nation occasionally came to light when Harry Powers of Clarksville, W. Va., confessed that he had murdered Mrs. Asta Elcher of Park Ridge, a suburb of Chicago, and her three children, and also Mrs. Dorothy Lonke of Massachusetts. The bodies of his five victims were found buried under his garage. Powers had wooed Mrs. Elcher through a matrimonial bureau and seduced her and the children to Clarksville, where he slew them with a hatchet and by strangulation. Since he had been corresponding with many other women the authorities have been searching his place for other bodies.

COW, A. BEN BOON of Montana, admitted that many forest fires were being set by unemployed men so they could get work. Heeding them, placed several companies of men to put out the fires and to hunt the incendiaries.

SIR HALL CAME, one of England's most eminent novelists, died at his home on the Isle of Man of heart disease, at the age of seventy-eight. His novels made him the storm center of many controversies and they also made him one of the wealthiest novelists in the world.

MRS. PHOEBE OMIE of Memphis, Tenn., veteran woman aviator, was the victor in the women's division of the national air derby which started at San Jose, Calif., and finished at the national air races in Cleveland. When the handicap competition was over, the results were ended. It was found that Phoebe also had won the open sweepstakes, besting all the men contestants. Winners in the men's division were H. C. Warren, first; Lee Parnes, second; E. C. Cress, third; and Marcelus King fourth.

After a good night's sleep the cigarette Mrs. M. C. Jungel ate for breakfast and won two of the four second prizes.

CREWS of six ships of the Chilean navy captured at Coquimbo and held their officers prisoners demanding that the government cancel reductions in pay that had been announced. A group of non-commissioned officers were directing the activities of the fleet at latest reports and they set the ultimatum of the men to Santiago. The cabinet met in the capital and decided that the mutiny should be put down with vigor, believing the nation would support such a course. The vessels concerned, representing a large part of the nation's navy, were the battleship Almirante La Torre, the cruiser O'Higgins and the destroyers Orelana, Serrano, Alder and Hyatt.

MUSSOLINI and the pope have finally settled their long quarrel over the Catholic Action clubs. Those organizations are allowed to resume their activities but are restricted to purely religious endeavors. They are barred from sports and athletics and are not to interfere into the syndical or trades union fields.

CHURCH ACTIVITIES

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH
L. A. Edwards, Pastor.

10:45. Morning Worship. The Pastor's theme will be "Embroidery or Patchwork."

Not long ago the Lewiston Journal carried this headline: "Blessed is he who embroiders Life with Religion." So many merely patch life with it.

Do we not know men and women whose lives are beautiful? Just what is it that makes these lives beautiful?

What has religion to offer as a beautifier of life? Which is more beautiful, a fine piece of embroidery, or a patched garment, even though the patch be sewed on with embroidery silk?

In our garment of life, we need a beautiful work of art, or an engaging array of patchwork?
